Welcome New Regional Water Planning Group Member:

Texas Water Development Board (TWDB) staff, looks forward to working with you during the development of your region's drought water supply plan. The regional water planning process, created in 1997 under Senate Bill 1, was set up to encourage public involvement by those directly affected by water supply issues. Regional water plans are developed every five years through consensus building with the voting interest categories on your regional water planning group (RWPG). The opportunity for RWPG members to participate in regional water planning comes with certain responsibilities. Planning group members are to:

- Represent their interest categories in the regional water planning process.
- Develop a water plan that serves the entire region and takes into consideration the water needs of all interests in the region.
- Consider local water plans developed by local entities when developing the regional water plan.
- Ensure adoption of a regional water plan by the statutory deadline that meets all requirements.

We encourage planning group members to regularly attend all planning group meetings and to become informed regarding the items on which they are being asked to make decisions.

Along the way, participants in this planning process should keep in mind that these are high-level, long-term drought of record based water supply plans that address all water uses. In addition, recommended water management strategies in the plans often must undergo more detailed evaluations before being permitted and implemented by the project sponsors.

The next regional water plans for the fifth cycle of regional planning must be adopted and submitted by October 14, 2020. I must emphasize that failure by a RWPG to adopt their regional water plan by the statutory deadline would present significant barriers to obtaining state financing including the State Water Implementation Fund for Texas
